1. Claims 1-8 are presented for examination.
2. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

3. Claims 1-8 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over McNeill et al in view of Cantos et al.
4. McNeill et al (6,421,706) taught the invention substantially as claimed including a system and method for executing a plugin, comprising the steps of:
 - a) transmitting the plugin through a network to several computers (Figure 1, remote computers 112-115) ; and
 - b) causing the several remote computers to execute the plugin. See col 9, lines 14-67; col 10; and col 11, line 1 et seq. See especially the sections explaining the code in the HTML page which specifies the plugin and upon the transmission of the HTML page to the remote computers, the plugin was executed. See for example, col 10, lines 11-48 and col 11, line 1 et seq. The javascript coming from the server determines the remote computers browser type and then sends the proper plugin. See also col 10, line 49 et seq. Applicant should note that McNeill et al teachings differ from the conventional plugin wherein the end-user manually configures the browser to execute certain plugins.

Art Unit: 2142

In McNeill's case, unlike the conventional plugin execution, the HTML code that is transmitted from the central server specifies execution of the plugin and provides the plugin for the remote client computer (see the javascript code listed in TABLE T3. Especially, see the "embed..." code which starts at col 11, line 30 et seq.) In the same field of endeavor Cantos et al (6,529,784) taught plugin transmitted by a control server (4) caused monitoring of the target computer and further caused transmitting of the data to the control server for monitoring purposes (see col 4, line 26 et seq.) It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the networking art at the time of the invention to combine the teachings of McNeill et al and Cantos et al so that Cantos et al's plugins would transmit data to the server for monitoring purposes and all other purposes like testing and the like to advance remote server monitoring capabilities of the server.

5. Other claimed features, e.g., monitoring taught by McNeill, (see, col 18, line 50 et seq.) Remote execution by plurality of computers, e.g., simultaneously are all inherent features of the Internet http protocol execution, e.g. all browser can execute simultaneously at the server is well known by everyone with any common and ordinary skill in the Internet browsing art and inherent features of the interactive browsing in the internet.

6. The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure.

Art Unit: 2142

Chan et al (6,397,256) taught a system for monitoring Internet usage including transmitting browser activity from the computer terminal to a monitoring unit through a plugin software package (see col 1, line 47 et seq and col 3, line 3 et seq.)
